Jennifer Wang is an associate at Carrington Coleman. Her practice includes business litigation, tort defense, health care litigation, products liability, and administrative law.

Ms. Wang represents clients in state and federal court and in administrative proceedings. Her experience and current practice includes:

- Representation of hospitals in all aspects of healthcare litigation, including medical malpractice actions, termination, credentialing and privilege disputes, Medicare billing and reporting matters, and licensing and regulatory issues.
- Representation of corporations in product liability actions, including asbestos claims in the state and federal MDL.
- Representation of individuals in personal injury tort actions; and businesses in actions involving breach of contract, fraud, misrepresentation, tortious interference, unfair competition, insurance coverage claims and other actions.
- Extensive in-court experience arguing dispositive motions, expert challenges, motions to compel, motions for protective orders and other discovery disputes, typically after researching and drafting such motions.
- Lead associate in preparation of pre-trial documents, arguing motions in limine and preparing fact and expert witnesses for testifying in numerous cases settled just prior to or following a pre-trial conference.
- Lead associate responsible for answering and propounding discovery, case investigation, taking, defending and preparing witnesses for depositions, interviewing and retaining expert witnesses, drafting mediation statements, negotiating and drafting settlement agreements, and participating in minor prove-up and other settlement hearings

Prior to becoming a lawyer, Ms. Wang worked as a print and broadcast journalist in Dallas, New York, Washington, D.C., North Carolina, and Florida. She also taught journalism at the college level.

Ms. Wang speaks Mandarin Chinese.
